The first New Man was, oddly enough, a successful moving picture producer. Perhaps he was fed up, as our English cousins say, on femining pulchritude and was satiated with large, lovely eyes that didn't have a ray of intelligence in them, and a weary of little heads and golden or raven black tresses that were nothing but solid fvory. Anyway, this is what the man said to me in regard to his demands in a wife:

"I don't care, arap for beauty. When I go to choose a wife I am not going to take a second glance at her complexion, or notice the color of her eyes or her hair. Neither do I care whether et she is fat or thin. The one thing that I am going to look for in a wife is brains.

"I don't mean canned college brains," Then, too, if I marry a woman with the first New Man was need yesterday sense enough to keep him enter tained? Well, I guess not.

needs. I shall not marry to get a cook, but a companion, and as for all of the old looking-up-to-your-husband stuff and the sacrificing wife business. I'll pass that up, too.

"T've none of the slave owner instincts. I want my wife to feel free and independent, to develop whatever ability she has and to feel that in marrying tme she got a pai instead of a boss. Only an intelligent woman can make a good wife, and that's why I'm going to consider the linide in stead of the outside of a malden's head when I get married."

The other New Man is engaged to a sirif who has a wonderful voice that she has spent many years and a fortune in cultivating. The man is deeply and sincerely in love with the girl, but instead of urging her to marry him at once and give up all thought of the public career, of which she has dreamed for so many years, he is putting off their marriage until after the girl has tested out her talent and is absolutely sure of her own heart.

"I might tell Marian," he said, "that home-making is a woman's predes tined career, that in the end the voice of love is more satisfying than the applause of the multitude, and that e had better croon juliables over he bables than have a theater rise at her. She would believe me and she would willingly marry me now. "But the reaction would come, and she would think with bitterness and regret of the career that she had thrown away and the sacrifices she had made for me and she would eat her heart out with unavailing longing for the opportunity that she had let slip. I am not going to let her do this; I want her to go on with her studies
